Those who were worried about “betrayal” or “capitulation” should be pleased with these statements.

Bermet Talant @bermet_parecer
Zelensky: “Three principles that I will never violate as the president of Ukraine”
- No federalization. Ukraine is a unitary state
- No foreign interference to influence Ukraine's course and development
- No relinquishment of territories. Crimea and Donbas are Ukraine

Yes, I experienced it. I wrote about some of the problems here, and documented the disappearing ads in March and April on my Twitter feed. (Am on mobile right now so a bit hard to find those old tweets)

7. Likewise for Ukrainians not expressing concern about the pressure campaign and withholding of aid.

And as for Sondland: it's pretty clear that he revised his sworn testimony to include the fact that there was a quid pro quo. Not sure why the WH letter mentioned him.

Many meetings have been held between representatives of Ukraine and our country. Never once did Ukraine complain about pressure being applied—not once! Ambassador Sondland testified that I told him: "No quid pro quo. I want nothing. I want nothing. I want President Zelensky to do the right thing, do what he ran on."

3. For the millionth time, it was international consensus that Shokin be fired. Aid is often conditioned this way. By firing Shokin, Biden was inviting more scrutiny of his son, not less.

I discussed this w/ @JudyWoodruff before impeachment began. pbs.org/newshour/snow/ ...

You know full well that Vice President Biden used his office and $1 billion dollars of U.S. aid money to coerce Ukraine into firing the prosecutor who was digging into the company paying his son millions of dollars. You know this because Biden bragged about it on video. Biden openly stated: "I said, 'I'm telling you, you're not getting the billion dollars.' I looked at them and said: 'I'm leaving in six hours. If the prosecutor is not fired, you're not getting the money.' Well, son of a bitch. He got fired." Even Joe Biden admitted just days ago in an interview with NPR that it "looked bad." Now you are trying to impeach me by falsely accusing me of doing what Joe Biden has admitted he actually did.

4. Zelensky is in an extraordinarily tough position, attempting to walk a fine line between Ds and Rs without upsetting anyone or the monetary and rhetorical support Ukraine needs. Of course he isn't going to accuse POTUS of wrongdoing. More on that here:

President Zelensky has repeatedly declared that I did nothing wrong, and that there was No Pressure. He further emphasized that it was a "good phone call," that "I don't feel pressure," and explicitly stressed that "nobody pushed me." The Ukrainian Foreign Minister stated very

2. The President said he "then mentions the attorney general," but before that he dives deep into the rabbit hole of the CrowdStrike / Ukrainian election interference conspiracy theory, which has been roundly debunked, including by me on

The President: I would like you to do us a favor though because our country has been through a lot and Ukraine knows a lot about it. I would like you to find out what happened with this whole situation with Ukraine, they say Crowdstrike... I guess you have one of your wealthy people... The server, they say Ukraine has it. There are a lot of things that went on, the whole situation. I think you're surrounding yourself with some of the same people. I would like to have the Attorney General call you or your people and I would like you to get to the bottom of it. As you saw yesterday, that whole nonsense ended with a very poor performance by a man named Robert Mueller, an incompetent performance, but they say a lot of it started with Ukraine. Whatever you can do, it's very important that you do it if that's possible.

Reminder: Giuliani and his entourage also claimed "a thousand troops were dispatched to Kyiv" to find them (they weren't, I was in Kyiv when he was there) and that Lutsenko died and was RESURRECTED TWICE.

Pretty sure nothing he says is "unequivocal."

Help, can't travel to non Christmas country due to hand injury: any tips on how to avoid hearing "jingle bell rock"? Or the same 20 songs again and again everywhere. There must be something in the Geneva conventions against this.

Let's not forget that the President's son, who has millions of loyal followers, spread this dreck prior to these Medium posts cropping up. This story had legs before Russia got involved.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia
This is ridiculous. Ambassador Yovanovitch is a career foreign servant who has served as Ambassador under Republicans and Democrats alike. She is not "Obama's" Ambassador in Ukraine any more than she was

4. Zelensky is in an extraordinarily tough position, attempting to walk a fine line between Ds and Rs without upsetting anyone or the monetary and rhetorical support Ukraine needs. Of course he isn't going to accuse POTUS of wrongdoing. More on that here: politico.com/magazine/story ...

President Zelensky has repeatedly declared that I did nothing wrong, and that there was No Pressure. He further emphasized that it was a "good phone call," that "I don't feel pressure," and explicitly stressed that "nobody pushed me." The Ukrainian Foreign Minister stated very clearly: "I have never seen a direct link between investigations and security assistance." He also said there was "No Pressure." Senator Ron Johnson of Wisconsin, a supporter of Ukraine who met privately with President Zelensky, has said: "At no time during this meeting ... was there any mention by Zelensky or any Ukrainian that they were feeling pressure to do anything in return for the military aid." Many meetings have been held between representatives of Ukraine and our country. Never once did Ukraine complain about pressure being applied—not once! Ambassador Sondland testified that I told him: "No quid pro quo. I want nothing. I want nothing. I want President Zelensky to do the right thing, do what he ran on."

5. What Zelensky has said (in an interview with ...) is that Trump has done enormous reputational damage to Ukraine. He added "If you're our strategic partner, then you can't go blocking anything for us. I think that's just about fairness."

To believe the arguments for impeachment you do not need to believe President Zelensky is a "pathological liar."

You need to understand that Zelensky taking on the President of the United States would be international political suicide.

It would jeopardize much needed aid and rhetorical support for Ukraine from the US, already imperiled by these events.

Ukraine has always been lucky to count on bipartisan support on Capitol Hill. Why should Zelensky risk that, when public evidence means he does not need to?

From the Epoch Times-related part of the Facebook takedown: these are huge numbers.

I'm particularly concerned about the activity in groups, where trust between members is higher, transparency is lower, and which Facebook is pushing membership in lately. (1/2)

72 accounts on Instagram.

- Followers: About 55 million accounts followed one or more of these Pages (the vast majority of which were outside of the US), about 381,500 accounts joined at least one of these Groups and around 92,000 people followed one or more of these Instagram accounts.
- Advertising: Less than $9.5M in spending for ads on Facebook and Instagram paid for primarily in US dollars, and some in Korean won, Vietnamese dong, Indonesian rupiah, Australian dollars, the New Taiwan dollars and Canadian dollars. That includes the entirety of advertising activity by both inauthentic and authentic accounts removed

And something I've always wondered, perhaps a little cheekily:

What happens to the money Facebook makes off of ads that violate its rules- in this case $9.5 MILLION?

By contrast, Facebook is investing $2 million in media literacy efforts ahead of 2020. 🧐

A) Initial reports suggested Navalny was detained- this tweet is 5 hours old.
B) You're splitting hairs. Is Navalny not the most prominent leader of the Russian opposition? This is a tweet, not an essay, and it's for an American audience, who know Navalny as described.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 4m

Does Grudinin get thousands of people on the streets? I recognize that Navalny is not the leader but he certainly is a leader, the same way Bernie or AOC are leaders in the Democratic Party though they hold no official office. You'll notice Mary's tweet doesn't use an article

I don't consider their leaders to be, but below that it's far more nuanced. Btw, US/UK media was happy to consider them the opposition when they made big gains in local elections in September. Remember that? There's a terrible lack of consistency in coverage of Russia.

- They don't show bias in their initial approach (ie no #MAGA or #RESIST rhetoric is prevalent right off the starting block)

3. To that end: mute liberally. Whether a thread, an account, or a subthread -- if you feel yourself getting upset about something happening on the Internet, mute! Close the computer! Take a walk! It's not worth it, and you're contributing to the ecosystem of inhumanity by engaging. I find muting is preferable to blocking for run-of-the-mill accounts because it gives them one less thing to rage about; they will never know if they've been muted. Of course, if an account is being abusive, it should be reported and blocked.
4. If you feel you're talking past someone but it's still worth engaging, move the conversation to a Direct Message, where you have more room to explore details and the stakes are lower.
5. Finally, the Internet is not just for hot takes, bad news, and flame wars. If you like a piece, an author, a picture of a dog, whatever, SHARE IT. Tell the person why. You might make someone's month. (Speaking of which, NPR's Ari Shapiro

Prominent women who support are being flooded with threats and abuse on all platforms. I'm not going to label the perpetrators. But you can guess which candidate they support. He seems unwilling to call them off.

Explain what you found out. Be sensitive. It's best not to use the term "fake news," as this person is sharing this content for a reason: one that they probably feel very deeply. The best disinfo is rooted in raw emotion. Walk them through your mini-investigation with care. (11/)

Guys, sorry, but I really disagree here. When this is your beat, this is what you write about. Insinuating that Jane is a grifter is out of line. She covers disinformation by crazies on the internet in great detail for pretty much every tragedy.

There's a lot to parse in this memo, but this seems particularly... short-sighted? Willfully ignorant? I can't wrap my head around how these sentences are written in succession.

nytimes.com/2020/01/07/tec ...

> But Parscale and Trump just did unbelievable work. They weren't running misinformation or hoaxes. They weren't microtargeting or saying different things to different people. They just used the tools we had to show the right creative to each person. The use of custom audiences, video, ecommerce, and fresh creative remains the high water mark of digital ad campaigns in my opinion.

Explain what you found out. Be sensitive. It's best not to use the term "fake news," as this person is sharing this content for a reason- one that they probably feel very deeply. The best disinfo is rooted in raw emotion. Walk them through your mini investigation with care. (11/)

Most of all, just be cautious with all your information right now, even from sources you trust.

You may have noticed I've been quiet the last few days; it's not because I don't care about Iran- I'm just very deliberately being HIGHLY selective about what I share. (13/)

It doesn't go without saying on the Internet when you double down for six replies and then someone else piles on, insinuating that it's all about the grift. Jane's work is stellar and I suggest you all take a look at it. 💁‍♀️ things to different ppl. That's the point, as ... who oversaw ads, knows

To be clear, I'm no fan of Trump. I donated the max to Hillary. After his election I wrote a post about Trump supporters that I'm told caused colleagues who had supported him to feel unsafe around me (I regret that post and deleted shortly after).

But Parscale and Trump just did unbelievable work. They weren't running misinformation or hoaxes. They weren't microtargeting or saying different things to different people. They just used the tools we had to show the right creative to each person. The use of custom audiences, video, ecommerce, and fresh creative remains the high water mark of digital ad campaigns in my opinion.

That brings me to the present moment, where we have maintained the same ad policies. It occurs to me that it very well may lead to the same result. As a committed liberal I find myself desperately wanting to pull any lever at my disposal to avoid the same result. So what stays my hand?

3 But with regard to both sexualized disinfo and other malign influence ops, I'm still more worried about cheap fakes than deep fakes. Crudely edited, deliberately misleading videos and images are still effective, and they're still allowed on most platforms.

Adding context for users, as FB & Twitter are doing, is necessary & important. It just takes so much time. I worry that by the time these pieces of content are downranked, the damage will already be done. "A lie can run halfway around the world before the truth has its shoes on."

Nina Jankowicz @w cz pedia · Jan 7

Overall, as wrote above, it's a good step. But we still have a lot of work to do on rapid response, and there's still lots of room for Congress and the wider gov't to pick up the slack, as ... points out:

But the National Security Act of 1947 says the C.I.A. cannot do counter-covert action here in the United States of America. So the entity that is best prepared to deal with countering covert action can't do it. Whose responsibility is it, then? Screenshot it. Sound the alarm. But don't use built in mechanisms to amplify and increase its virality. (12/)

Most of all, just be cautious with all your information right now, even from sources you trust.

You may have noticed I've been quiet the last few days; it's not because I don't care about Iran- I'm just very deliberately being HIGHLY selective about what I share. (13/)

I feel like that's my duty, but not just because I study disinformation or have a blue check mark; it's my duty as a citizen trying to keep our digital ecosystem clean.

Hope you'll do your part too.

My mom just shared a fake Warren Buffett quote on Facebook, which the application flagged to me as fake. Her response when I told her: "Weird. It sounded like a good quote." Next step, FB: a step-by-step guide on how to teach your FB-obsessed parents to check their sourcing.

Totally agree- I've been advocating for this for a long time. FB has near ubiquitous access to some people's lives. They can remind me of memories I'd rather forget and tell me when I might need an umbrella, but do little to educate their users about how they're being conned.

This morning I woke up to a message from @vanbadham about disinformation spreading in the midst of the wildfires in Australia.

Tonight, on this side of the world, the floodgates are open re: Iran.

Van asked me: what can we do when our loved ones are sharing this stuff? (1/)

You don't need to be a professional fact checker to spot misleading reporting or straight up lies. Here are some quick checks you can do: (2/)

1 57 128

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia Jan 5
1. Does the outlet list staff and contact info? Reputable news outlets should have real people on their mastheads, and more than a PO Box, or worse, a "contact us" form as their contact info. (3/)

1 40 139

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia Jan 5
2. Does the article have a byline? If so, what is the author's publication record? Does the gravity of the news they claim to be breaking match it? (4/)

Adding context for users, as FB & Twitter are doing, is necessary & important. It just takes so much time. I worry that by the time these pieces of content are downranked, the damage will already be done. "A lie can run halfway around the world before the truth has its shoes on."

Overall, as I wrote above, it's a good step. But we still have a lot of work to do on rapid response, and there's still lots of room for Congress and the wider gov't to pick up the slack, as @digiphile points out:

It just seems like a nonsense liberal arts degree for people who weren't able to get into a more useful course, but still wanted to say they attended (insert name here) university, to be honest. That's my view. You're entitled to yours

Yeah, and I find that "view" fairly ridiculous as I chose to study Russia and Eurasia. The students in my program as well as many of the others in the United States had deep regional experience- it's a requirement for most programs before even applying.

Oh, besides the ever-present pronounciation struggles with my last name, spelling it on the phone is a challenge.

I've settled on a script of "I, c as in cat, z as in zebra," and it's still sometimes ends up incorrect. Sigh...

I would avoid that. Many of the disinformation campaigns we've seen in the last ten years are around events other than elections, and indeed the groundwork for election-based disinformation campaigns is laid long before the events themselves.

Sure, but if we're talking a shared lexicon I think it's important to stress to the public and to policymakers that this exists and in fact, is rampant outside of election periods. It's a common misconception and leads to misguided policy and action

Thinking back to when I sent this tweet from a train in Ukraine while covering the election.

As documents released tonight show, it was way worse than the Ambassador being chewed out by those in the President's inner circle: they were SURVEILLING HER.

I am sick.

I'm sorry but what the %@$& does this mean?!?!?.

This is not just a person about whom "they need to make contact with security forces," presumably to forceably remove her. It's not just a U.S. citizen. IT IS OUR AMBASSADOR IN AN ALLIED NATION. I just can't fathom this.

I just keep coming back to the fact that Amb. Yovanovitch said she was afraid for her personal safety at the end of her term. Being US Ambassador is not an easy post, and there are certainly dangers involved, as with any post abroad, but you don't expect it to come from your own.

Not saying Parnas is right or wrong at this point - we don't have any solid corroboration. It doesn't look good for Trump, Pence, Barr, or Nunes, though.

One concern about the [illegible] law shared by [illegible] in a letter to the Ministry was that the Information Commissioner, selected by the Cabinet of Ministers, would essentially be a political actor responsible for deciding what information is reliable and what isn't

Matthew Schaaf @schfm · 3h

Instead of guarding the public's interest in access to a variety of opinions & sources of high quality information, the Information Commissioner – with the power to penalize alleged bad actors – could in reality represent the gov's interests & would be vulnerable to politics.

Malign actors often use legitimate, local voices to seed their messages in target societies. It's something we don't talk about nearly enough.

We focus on the "foreign." What do we do when disinformation isn't coming from foreign voices at all?

years of this administration. I'm proud of the work we've done. This administration delivered the capability for the Ukrainians to defend themselves. President Obama showed up with MREs (meals ready to eat.) We showed up with Javelin missiles. The previous administration did nothing to take down corruption in Ukraine. We're working hard on that. This statement from Pompeo is incorrect. Trump didn't "show up" with Javelins- lethal aid to Ukraine was taken out of the GOP platform and only with much haranguing was it given, and then, without any fanfare, days before Christmas. (1/2)

You know, I agreed to come on your show today to talk about Iran. That's what I intend to do. I know what our Ukraine policy has been now for the three years of this administration. Many of the young public servants I know could easily get much more lucrative jobs. But they're committed to making change in their country.

They know they're out-resourced by the Kremlin, but they still show up for work and for their countrymen every day.

Ukrainians are trying, despite the odds, to make a country where they can live with dignity. Where their voices are heard. Where getting a good grade or a job isn't about how rich you are or who you know.

White House counsel is really relying on a fantasy that President Trump cares deeply about corruption overseas.

He was not concerned about "Ukrainian corruption" until the 2020 election was in sight. If he was, he would have put all aid to Ukraine under review in January 2017.

And lest the American people be led astray:

Ukraine made more progress in tackling corruption in the last 6 yrs than it did since 1991, all while fighting a war, dealing with "Ukraine fatigue," and more recently, being used as a political football.

Don't believe the hype

This recording outlines that Trump was at least aware even the temporary damage withholding aid would do to Ukraine's negotiating position.

As I laid out for @PostOpinions, it doesn't matter the aid was eventually released. The hold had an effect. washingtonpost.com/outlook/2019/1 …

He was vaguely aware, but the other thing the tape shows is that he was mostly indifferent and abjectly ignorant about the Ukraine. His remarks to remove the ambassador sounded half-assed albeit with his signature mob talk and rudeness. He didn't care enough to follow up then Worth noting of course that we don't have licensing fees as in the UK. But trust in BBC is still over 60% last time I checked, and it's not like most Americans don't pay for cable...

That's abysmal. There are similar calls to do away with public broadcasters in Canada and the UK. Mostly those people calling for it have bought into a political narrative accusing them of liberal bias. Interesting though the BBC is often accused of being too conservative

As expected, without a sense of irony, the same activists and media that clamored for new paper-ballot voting machines (a good idea) are now using the IA caucus fiasco to make voters scared that new voting tech could cause problems. The Kremlin is smiling. /1

David Becker @beckerdavid 22h

First, the IA app problems, which were very bad, only affected reporting (not counting, which was done on paper). Second, the IA caucus is run by the IA Dem Party, not the election pros who will be running the primaries and general elections. There's no comparison. /2

David Becker @beckerdavid 22h

Second, buying, deploying, and training staff and volunteer poll workers on new voting tech does take time, and can be challenging. There will be a few problems (forgetting to plug in machines, etc.), but the new tech is necessary and election off'ls are working hard. /3

David Becker @beckerdavid 22h

Unlike IA, these machines are being introd in pilots in most cases (in 2019 and early 2020), and election off'ls are learning. But the main goal is to ensure that everyone is ready in November, and we'll be learning and teaching poll workers through the year. /4

Baxter showed up on our porch two weeks ago and we are all adjusting to life with a cat!

Now if anyone has tips on how to keep him off the counters, please send them my way 😂

Yeah good luck with that! We built a shelf above a radiator exclusively for Fleur, right at the window, which she loves to lie on. That might help you.

Although it doesn't stop her jumping on the dining table

I guess they didn't know the importance of having the high ground. But seriously, don't let him see food there, take him off there and make a loud sound, or spray him with water every time he's there. I'd give those a 50% chance of working though. Cats are professional trolls

We've trained our cat relatively well through loud sounds when we're at home But I suspect it's a cat party up there when we're gone, since there's always stray cat hair

Reflecting trends I observed in Ukraine last spring and a worldwide pivot to groups pushed by FB, groups seem to be where a lot of the activity was concentrated.

I have long been against these types of bans. The arts can aid understanding and reconciliation, when the time comes. In the interim, bans are certainly not in line with democratic norms, and can ultimately aid the whataboutist arguments of governments like Russia's.

Today's news is another reminder of the importance of this recommendation from the @SecureDemocracy policy blueprint for countering authoritarian interference in democracy gmfus.org/file/25928/dow…

senior-level Foreign Interference Coordinator ideally at the level of Deputy Assistant to the President at the National Security Council and establish a Hybrid Threat Center at the Office of the Director of National Intelligence to coordinate policy and intelligence across the U.S. government respectively.

3. Separate politics from efforts to unmask and respond to foreign operations against the U.S. electoral process. An incumbent government must be able to respond to an attack on our electoral system without being susceptible to accusations of political machinations. Congress should institute mandatory reporting requirements so that an administration must inform lawmakers of foreign attacks against U.S. electoral infrastructure, including individual political campaigns. Political parties and candidates running for office should also pledge publicly not to use weaponized information obtained through hacks or other illicit means.

Well, the week of the anniversary of the deaths of 100 protestors killed by sniper fire on Ukraine's Maidan, Russia's MFA is definitely having a normal one.

It's not at all trying to escape blame for starting an armed conflict in Europe or anything.

Of course not.

❗ An unbiased investigation of all aspects of the tragedy could throw light on the sad events of February 2014. But those who came to power by overthrowing legitimate President Viktor Yanukovych had things to conceal

I can t fault the plug, but that wasn't the only thing you told ... doesn't match the indictment. You also said the Russians helped Sanders and Trump "equally." The indictment certainly indicates otherwise, even if you leave out post-convention activity.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia

Replying to

That's actually not true- the Mueller report and further reporting details how Russians supported groups on the left and right. This is a pattern that has been repeated across Eastern Europe.

Peter Crowley @PeterCrowley 1m

Replying to

What I stated about the indictment is precisely true. It details much more Russian support of Trump than of Sanders. Please take a quick look if you have any doubt. I don't dispute the assistance to Sanders, but your use of "equally" is not supported in the indictment.

I appreciate that, but that's really a matter of choice as far as the scholars who work there. University scholars don't generate this kind of scrutiny due to the how they're run. There are plenty of institutions completely outside the government that can comment on governments.

Breaking from WaPo: Bernie Sanders briefed by U.S. officials that Russia is trying to help his presidential campaign. Not clear what form the interference has taken: washingtonpost.com/national-secur

You'd be surprised how much carried over from the "beta" age of social media in countries like Estonia to today. Social media & tech advancements allow more precise targeting the book covers too. It's all part of the same campaign. I invite you to read it and then pass judgement.

I will! But 2005 does not equate to 2020, nor the technology! Trust me I'm not a bot & not remotely trying to throw a "hard check," but the underlying apparatus within 15 years has not just grown, it has grown exponentially. Regretfully, the comic book level of the read has not!

All said, I wish the book success! I live in the middle of it in the EU

THREAD. If Bernie is the nominee, he needs to DEMAND, vocally and repeatedly, that the IC thoroughly investigate all Russian efforts to boost his campaign, provide him with regular updates, and for Trump to immediately take steps to ensure election security. This serves 3 goals:

502 Retweets 1,699 Likes

94 · 502 · 1.7K

Asha Rangappa @AshaRangappa_ · 13m

FIRST: It gives teeth to his assertion that he does not want the help and that he is willing to stand up to Putin. It illustrates, unequivocally, that he takes the side of our intelligence agencies over Russia and himself. It gives needed support to our IC.

7 · 87 · 501

Asha Rangappa @AshaRangappa_ · 11m

SECOND: It's an obvious contrast to Trump's actions in 2016 — i.e., it's how a person who is horrified at foreign election interference would behave. It also drives home the point that when one is innocent of collusion, one does not fear counterintelligence measures to stop it.

5 · 75 · 449

Asha Rangappa @AshaRangappa_ · 9m

THIRD: It puts the onus on Trump to do something. Remember that if Bernie gets nom AND wins, Trump will contest results, claiming that outcome is not legit because Russia helped him. If he refuses to take action NOW, that argument rings hollow.

Great convo with @MarquardtA and @StevenLHall1 on Russian disinformation this evening.

As we go through 2020, we'd do well to remember that Russia's strategy isn't about creating "fakes" or duping people, but exacerbating preexisting fissures and sentiments to create chaos.

To be fair Trump's politics was hardly pro-Putin in the last three years. his admin picked Deripaska as sanctions target, expelled RU diplomats, promoted shale oil and gas and boost NATO spending. I don't see how that plays into Putin s hands

Nina Jankowicz @w cz pedia 9m

What the administration does and what the President says are two different things any good the Trump admin has done wrt Russia is undercut by his embrace of Putin and undermining of our intelligence community

Nina Jankowicz @w cz pedia 7m

And on NATO do you really think the Alliance is stronger because Trump bullied some members into meeting an arbitrary spending target after spending years talking about how NATO is obsolete? We have frayed many of our closest relationships, esp in NATO that also helps Putin.

Why do we always hear propagandists like you resort to general statements and never descend into particular details?

What was campaign budgets, creatives, impact in terms of impressions, clicks and conversions in terms or real votes?

A few paragraphs into this @SevaUT piece and already cheering in my office!

Domestic disinformation is a threat with which we have not even begun to reckon.
warontherocks.com/2020/02/the-gr …

Displacing the blame onto foreign autocrats, while politically palatable in Washington, creates a false distinction in which an innocent democracy is being subverted by malevolent outside forces. Doing so distracts from the core problem: the immense incentives for disinformation built into democratic institutions.

A good reminder from my book's prologue for... pretty much everyone on the internet today.

(You can preorder it here or on Amazon: bloomsbury.com/us/how-to-lose …)

While some efforts described in these pages found more success than others, one thing above all else stands out; while we in the West have been slow off the starting block, unable to recognize the dividing lines in our societies, and unwilling to admit that our fellow citizens draw them, Russia has us lapped. Although its goal is increased global influence, Russia's disinformation campaigns operate on an undeniably human level, often employing local actors to cast a spell of plausible deniability and increase the authenticity of their message. Our response, however, exists almost entirely in two realms.

If we don't adapt to this information war, our panic over election meddling could become self-fulfilling. And we will become useful idiots in the undermining of our own electoral legitimacy.

I'm keeping a thread (with links to other great threads) on why paying people for their data isn't a good idea. Data privacy should not be framed as a property right; data privacy is more of a public good and/or human right.

Rachel Thomas @math_rachel
My issues with proposals to compensate ppl for their data (as a solution to privacy):
- fail to treat privacy as a public good, which can't be protected via the decisions of individuals
- privacy becomes a luxury for the rich

What you CAN do to protect yourself way more than a mask is.

Wash your hands A LOT, for the duration of singing Happy birthday twice each time

Use hand sanitizer between washes, after you've pressed elevator buttons etc. and wipe down your phone and other constantly used things.

1 27 66

Clara Jeffery @ClaraJeffery 56m

Also while vigorously washing your hands with soap for 20 seconds, including backs of hands and under nails is the best prevention, use hand sanitizers that are at least 60% alcohol.

I believe that this is true. But as I said on ... a few days ago, the good work being done is undermined by the messaging coming out of the White House. My research shows that recognition of the disinfo threat at the highest levels of govt is key to fighting it.

The level of coordination and communication between the federal government and state, local, and private sector partners is stronger than it's ever been. Our departments and agencies are working together in an unprecedented level of commitment and effort to protect our elections and to counter malign foreign influence, but voters have a role to play too.

Why, why, why would you say this and then not link to a resource that directs people to said trustworthy information? This is the internet - part of the reason we are in this situation is that people don't want to do the work- let's make it easy for them!

The system does more than decide in real time whether someone poses a contagion risk. It also appears to share information with the police, setting a template for new forms of automated social control that could persist long after the epidemic subsides.

I would really prefer it the public got briefed on foreign interference efforts - like those to support the Sanders camp - by a non partisan government actor. The fact that this system doesn't exist leaves us open to leaks and damaging accusations like the one in screenshot below

Quick note from Bernie's presser earlier today in Utah. At one point, when a Washington Post reporter raised his hand, Sanders looked at him, pointed, and said, "No." A terse & striking moment after the recent incident where he criticized the timing of a...

So, not long ago, I moderated a professional talk. It was over an hour on a topic where I have pretty significant professional experience. It went well, and then had a weird thing happen after.

3 2 25

Lizzie O'Leary @lizzieohreally · 22m

An older man, in a position of authority in this situation, was chatting with me after. And he said "you may have a voice for podcasts, but you have a face for television."

I have no doubt he meant it as a harmless, friendly compliment. But it was also just so tiring.

In other countries in the post-Soviet space, ruling parties abuse administrative resources to which they have access, privileging incumbent campaigns.

What is not election rigging: having a historically diverse set of candidates winnowed down by a democratic process. Having those candidates endorse other candidates with whom their positions align.

Don't get me wrong, there is DEFINITELY ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT in how we run primaries and elections in this country; many of those criticisms have been particularly strongly felt this primary cycle, particularly for minorities and women.

But decrying the process as "rigged" is an incredibly serious accusation that could potentially have ripple effects up to and including the peaceful transfer of power between administrations.

Voter suppression is no doubt a huge problem in the United States. The allegations of "rigging" I'm seeing and addressing here are aimed at the Democratic Party itself, altho the Dems fight voter suppression! These decisions are made locally, where Dems might not be in charge.

Yeah, the millions who are voting are getting their voices heard. Sometimes millions of people lose too. That doesn't mean the system is rigged.

Yeah, 7 hour waits to vote in areas with a high concentration of youth and/or POC voters is totally normal and fair

You're right, it isn't fair. That's up to state and local election officials who administer the polling places, not the Democratic Party. Down ballot races are important so that we can address those issues. What you're discussing isn't about the "rigging" of a primary election.

Accept that manufactured consent is real and you won't sound so ridiculous defending our process

It's not even that. She is talking about the Russians and Ukrainians but applying it to the US. That is a strawman. People have raised concerns about massive statistical anomalies in the US for a long, long time

That's called comparative politics, my friend, and there are actually international elections standards by which I'm evaluating our process. Has anyone raised statistical anomalies about this particular process? No. Be responsible with these allegations. They are serious.

Don't get me wrong, there is DEFINITELY ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT in how we run primaries and elections in this country; many of those criticisms have been particularly strongly felt this primary cycle, particularly for minorities and women.

This is a brilliant thread
It should be printed out and stapled to the door of Sanders headquarters like Martin Luther with the Diet of Weims.

And of course some of those reasons are valid! No one ever loses for one reason and one reason only. But also, an American woman has never won the race for the presidency, even when they were so undeniably the better candidate (hi Hillary v Trump 2016)

I think a lot of women relate to this feeling: Knowing deep down that we were the best prepared, the most knowledgable, the hardest working and we were still overlooked or pushed aside. A lot of us grasp for reasons to explain it away because "it's just you" is too painful.

Exactly. Cultural exchange is not malicious; it is the basis to reconciliation and building mutual understanding. And of course the Russian government was trying to figure out how they might use it to their advantage; that doesn't mean that Sanders had ulterior motives.

I'm obvs not Bernie's biggest fan, but the @nytimes piece re: a Soviet sister city in 1987 is egregious.

Were US participants targeted for propaganda? Sure. We targeted the Soviets for our propaganda too.

Meanwhile ordinary people established international goodwill. The horror!

I taught English in Vladimir, Russia, in 2003-04 before enrolling in the Ph.D. program in Russian history at Stanford. I worked at an organization called the American Home, part of a sister city project established in the early 1990s. These initiatives were good things.

What I have seen on my social networks and among fellow passengers was widespread confusion about the new regulations and their effects. We need clearer communication at these times to keep people safe, combat misinformation, and keep a modicum of trust in our institutions.

Dozens of panicked emails and DMs about removed posts really drive home for me how powerful FB is, how emotionally tied people are to their posts, and how distrustful users are of the platform.

> Guy Rosen @guyro

I'm a huge admirer of the excellent journalists at NPR and PBS, delivering Americans trusted info in these trying times.

But imagine what they could do with more funding and weren't lambasted by government officials as "partisan."

Who should speak?

Public health officials, doctors, and nurses are amongst the most trusted people everywhere. Use them to spread messages. I'd like to see more nurses talking. Politicians should introduce them to give them a higher profile. Then get out of the way. (2/25)

When should they speak?

To start: daily press conferences. I'm seeing this pretty much everywhere. (actually these are less important than politicians think. I'll get to that.)

Problem: fancy new terms like "social distancing" over-complicate things. Explain simply! (3/25)

Russia (or China, or Iran) using this crisis to its advantage is not surprising to me in the slightest. What saddens and disgusts me is seeing domestic politicians doing the same, for their own personal gain.

One of the best antidotes to foreign disinfo during a crisis is clear, cogent, coordinated communication from our leaders. And we haven't seen that in the slightest. We've seen the opposite:

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia 10m

the President preaching about social distancing while shaking hands with business leaders at a press conference that shouldn't have happened in person. That's why we're seeing naive college students partying on Miami Beach.

As I wrote yesterday, in a metaphor meant to elicit absolute revulsion (you're welcome):

The point is not that the president was a jerk to a reporter. It's that it was a gimme question, a chance to be reassuring or show some sort of leadership. The response was not surprising, but revealing nonetheless.

This makes me incandescent with rage. Embassies around the world are working 24/7 to get Americans home, advise those who stay abroad, and coordinate with other governments on response. Ditto for State employees in Washington. What's missing is leadership at the top.

What's stunning is that Pompeo actually took the mike at the daily COVID19 presser to praise all State employees at our embassies and consulates and elsewhere working round the clock to help. I didn't hear the President say this at the conference.

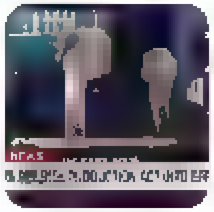
Trump is not only presenting confusing messaging about #COVID19 to the American public, he is using the crisis as a bully pulpit to attack freedom of the press and disparage "fake news."

Journalism that asks uncomfortable and necessary questions is not and has never been "fake."



Oliver Darcy @oliverdarcy
@kaitlancollins asks Trump if attacking @PeterAlexander and NBC is appropriate given the country is going through a crisis.

A few months ago (feels like forever ago), we bought a bat house on etsy. Last night we ate on our patio even though it was lightly sprinkling. And for the first time, I saw two bats flitting around overhead! It felt like a sign that things will return to normal one day.

I went for a hike today and it has turned me into a lockdown evangelist.

I left home early, planned to stay at least 6 feet from other humans, and for about 75% of the trail, managed to do just that.

Until all the late risers made it to the park. Here's what I saw:

Night hiking is nice, if usually not quite legal. In the winter it is very practical most nights depending on snow and cloud cover, but it is still feasible in the summer if there's enough moonlight. Always bring a light source for emergencies.

For many people it seems to be extremely hard to understand what's going on and what might be the consequences. Grown up pampered and in a sunshine situation. A lot of mistakes were made in the past, and now we scold the wrong ones, I am afraid.

In a supermarket, a couple is picking up every garlic clove, squishing it for firmness, then putting back, no gloves
Me: "Excuse me. I don't think we should be doing this now."
Woman, scowls: "Well, don't get 'em. And go back to where you're from."

Indeed it is. Trump is unable to comprehend the value of saving lives - which for normal people is value in and of itself

But even for a sociopath like he is, he's still not grasping the only way to blunt a pandemic-causes recession is to blunt the severity of the pandemic

Almost two weeks ago, I experienced mild flu-like symptoms (aches, chills). On Thursday, after they passed, I called … which said I could come down for a COVID-19 test. Yesterday it came back positive.

I feel completely fine, and would be isolating regardless. Many even my age aren't so lucky. Two notes: my sense of smell disappeared completely and is only now slowly coming back. And this illustrates how easy it is to be a carrier with only mild symptoms. Please stay home.

Exactly. This is why I've been extremely annoyed with the requests for comment about Russian coronavirus disinfo I've been getting and am attempting to squeeze in discussion of domestic sources wherever possible. Sigh...

I've never had trouble writing.

I've always had a journalist's approach. Writing has always been just the thing I do. So I did it.

Until March 2020

I can barely hold a thought for even 15 minutes.

And I hate all my words

I know I'm not alone

31 16 312

Mike Caulfield @holden 4h

I feel this exactly. I've never been precious about it. I sit down and I type. Maybe my one great gift. And now

I realize that it's because writing requires a suspension of disbelief. You have to inhabit words as being meaningful, at least in a moment. I've lost that.

True, but they aren't enough to run a country. Particularly when combined w dementia/sunsetting & sexual assault. Wish the media would stop w the softball interviews w Biden. Of he's the nom, Fox will bury him. Get him prepared &/or amplify the other option as well. [illegible]

I don't really do partisan politics on here. My tweet was coming from the space of someone who lost their father at age 21 and was touched by how Biden handled this question. But I hardly think it's a softball given what thousands of Americans are going through right now.

Appreciate the response & I'm sorry for your loss. Given that we're in the midst of a pandemic & our country is run by a literal sociopath, the question feels softball to me. Caveat: I'm more action-driven than emotion-driven, so I care about what he's (not) doing more ✌

This shows the really fickle nature of social media platforms' content moderation decisions. We see activity after horrific events like Christchurch, and in the midst of crises like COVID-19. But when it comes to political disinformation and lies the wire doesn't get tripped.

Being surrounded by journalists day in and out, we feel no "glee" in reporting on this virus.
There is risk for those of us who are out of our homes.
There is trauma. Stress. Fear.
Most importantly - there is the need and the desire to inform.

Not glee. Not over this.

I feel like I'm seeing more manels/poor attempts at gender parity in the age of Zoom events. This is really inexcusable given that these events are inherently more flexible than those held in-person.

If your event has 8 speakers, a single woman is not enough!

If you are having trouble securing female speakers because #St yAtHome means they are occupied with childcare, ask yourself what you can do to make it easier for women experts to join.

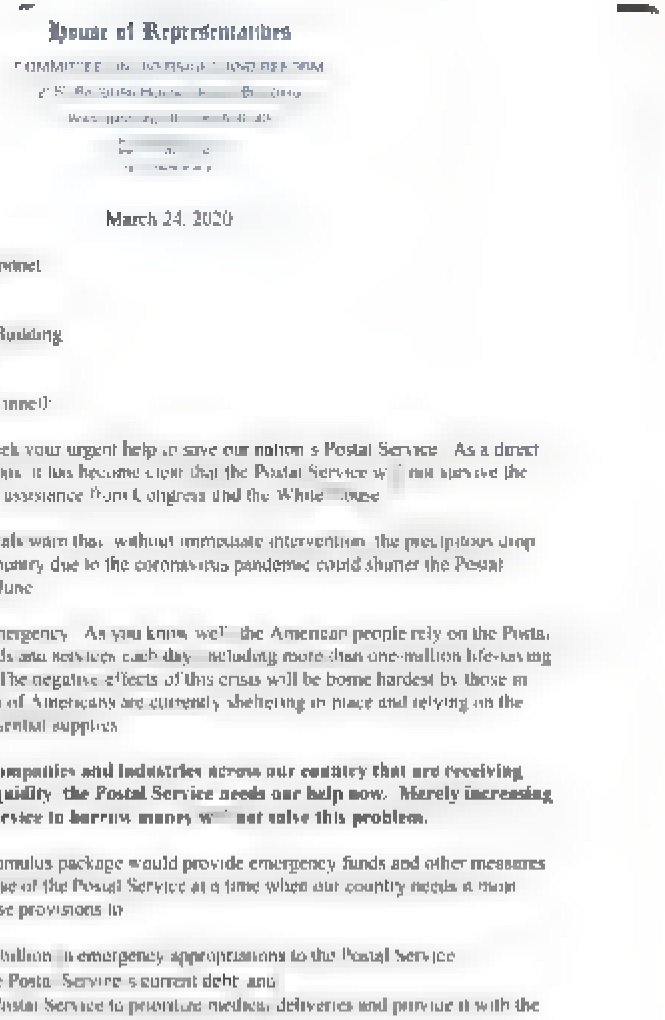
This will have dramatic effect on efforts to expand vote-by-mail for prez election. US Postal Service says it will run out of $ by June. Stimulus bill initially gave $25 billion to USPS but Trump reportedly objected; instead bill allows PS to only borrow $10 billion from Treasury



House of Representatives

COMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT AND REFORM

March 24, 2020

The Honorable Mitch McConnell
Majority Leader
United States Senate
317 Russell Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C. 20510

Dear Majority Leader McConnell:

We are writing to seek your urgent help to save our nation's Postal Service. As a direct result of the coronavirus crisis, it has become clear that the Postal Service will not survive the summer without immediate assistance from Congress and the White House.

Postal Service officials warn that, without immediate intervention, the precipitous drop off in mail use across the country due to the coronavirus pandemic could shutter the Postal Service's doors as early as June.

This is a national emergency. As you know well, the American people rely on the Postal Service to deliver vital goods and services each day, including more than one-million life-saving medications just last year. The negative effects of this crisis will be borne hardest by those in rural areas, where millions of Americans are currently sheltering in place and relying on the Postal Service to deliver essential supplies.

Like many other companies and industries across our country that are receiving substantial infusions of liquidity, the Postal Service needs our help now. Merely increasing the ability of the Postal Service to borrow money will not solve this problem.

The recent House stimulus package would provide emergency funds and other measures to avert an economic collapse of the Postal Service at a time when our country needs it most. We urge you to support these provisions to:

- provide $25 billion in emergency appropriations to the Postal Service;
- eliminate the Postal Service's current debt; and
- require the Postal Service to prioritize medical deliveries and provide it with the foreignpolicy.com/2020/03/30/rus ...

"Of those Russian supplies, 80 percent were completely useless or of little use to Italy. In other words, the delivery was more like a pretext," an Italian government official told the leading newspaper La Stampa. According to the official, the Russian delivery contained, for example, equipment for bacteriological disinfection and a field laboratory for chemical-biological sterilization—not the ventilators and personal protective equipment so desperately needed by the Italians.

This isn t about banding together as humans, either. The Kremlin deploys foreign aid strategically. And I'm sure a lot of Russians in need aren't going to see a drop of it.

My point was that these supplies will not be sent to Russians in need. Instead they're being used as a PR stunt. But sure, nitpick a tweet.

Russian Foreign Ministry shared a video of a cargo plane loaded with medical supplies bound for the United States along with hashtag "Russia helps." Expect Putin and loyal state media to talk about this propaganda victory and Russia's growing int'l role for a long time to come.

It's mind boggling to me. In 2012 USAID was asked to leave Russia because the Kremlin said "it didn't need US assistance anymore." (Of course there were many other motivations.) And here we are, blithely accepting this help. It's an absolute PR victory.

It's mind boggling to me. In 2012 USAID was asked to leave Russia because the Kremlin said "it didn't need US assistance anymore." (Of course there were many other motivations.) And here we are, blithely accepting this help. It's an absolute PR victory.

It's mind boggling to me. In 2012 USAID was asked to leave Russia because the Kremlin said "it didn't need US assistance anymore." (Of course there were many other motivations.) And here we are, blithely accepting this help. It's an absolute PR victory.

Sending something is better than nothing. The article says the Italians received 'equipment for bacteriological disinfection and a field laboratory for chemical biological sterilization' not ventilators and PPE' so it was helpful just not ideal. The USA got masks.

During quarantine, Ukraine will broadcast lessons for students in 5th-11th grades each day on TV, announces First Lady Olena Zelenska.

Interesting way to get around Internet connectivity issues; curious to see how this works.

Mr. President, @realDonaldTrump, I've asked you fair & relevant questions on your evolving approach & rhetoric regarding coronavirus. For example, last Sun., I asked: You've said some governors don't need the equipment they're requesting. How might that impact your decisions? 1/3

You denied saying that & said, "Be nice." Yet, days before on Fox News, you said, "I don't believe you need 40,000 or 30,000 ventilators." You have since repeated that sentiment. Yesterday, you said of states, "Sometimes when they know they don't need it they want it anyway." 2/3

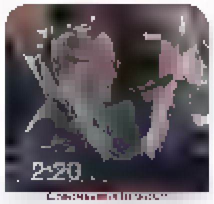
Trump spouts disinfo about mail-in voting and "cheating."

Wonder what citizens of CO, HI, OR, WA, UT - all of which vote only by mail- think of that?

There are challenges to mail-in ballots, but we can overcome them. People need to be able to vote without fear of infection.



Aaron Rupar @atrupar
Trump ends the press briefing with some thoughts on voting rights. "I think a lot of people cheat with mail-in voting ... think people should with ID ... voter ID ... you should have a picture for voting. It should be called voter ID."

Another illustration of the problems with Facebook's third-party fact-checking program (and fact-checking in general as a panacea for disinformation).

Stop Fake once played an invaluable service in Ukraine, but as Chris lays out below, its standards have traded in for politics.

In many countries, VOA and RFERL journalists put themselves in grave danger to work for an outlet with journalistic integrity. Statements like this - coming from the White House, of all places - are very likely to get people arrested, at best.

RT is not part of any "disinfo toolkit." It is a news organization. Like all news organizations, it occasionally makes mistakes. It does not deliberately circulate "disinformation," AFAIK. It also makes considerably fewer mistakes than many prominent Western news outlets.

It's not twitter's fault. Instagram and twitter used to play nice but once facebook acquired insta they no longer permitted previews for insta links. I always assumed it was fb's doing bc it made twitter even more annoying to use.

Woah. Formal state department statement from Pompeo on the cyberattacks facing the Czech Republic twitter.com/bing_chris/sta …

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Office of the Spokesperson

For Immediate Release

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY MICHAEL R. POMPEO

April 17, 2020

The United States Concerned by Threat of Cyber Attack Against the Czech Republic's Healthcare Sector

The United States notes with concern the warning from the Czech Republic's National Cyber and Information Security Agency of a "real threat of serious cyber attacks" against its healthcare sector. As the world battles the COVID-19 pandemic, malicious cyber activity that impairs the ability of hospitals and healthcare systems to deliver critical services could have deadly results. Anyone that engages in such action should expect consequences. We call upon the actor in question to refrain from carrying out disruptive malicious cyber activity against the Czech Republic's healthcare system or similar infrastructure elsewhere. We also call upon all states not to turn a blind eye to criminal or other organizations carrying out such activity from their territory.

The United States has zero tolerance for malicious cyber activity designed to undermine U.S. and international partners' efforts to protect, assist, and inform the public during this global pandemic. Such activity against critical civilian infrastructure is deeply irresponsible and dangerous. The United States promotes a framework of responsible state behavior in cyberspace, including nonbinding norms regarding states refraining from cyber activities that intentionally damage critical infrastructure and knowingly allowing their territory to be used for malicious cyber activities. When states do not abide by this framework, we hold them accountable.

🙎‍♀️🙎‍♀️🙎‍♀️🙎‍♀️This meme floating around claiming a photo from LA was reused to show crowded beaches in Jacksonville is a fake. You don't even need to do a reverse image search- the photo on the NYP piece is from Getty, & the image on its website: gettyimages.com/detail/news-ph …

Two things that are not mutually exclusive:

-Russia continues its disinformation campaigns against the US.
-"Poorly written tweets that make more sense in a 'Russian accent'" (whatever that means) are not even close to enough evidence to attribute content to Russian operatives

I find making a mind map (google it) of questions beforehand is very useful as not only makes you focus on topics but makes you think about the relationships between topics which is the more interesting questions & the pic is more efficient way of laying out Ques than notes

This is really the essence of the problem: the high infection rate. I wish we in the media would report this more clearly. Most people I've spoken with don't get this at all

In one prison barrack 93% of prisoners tested positive in AR. If fatality rate is even modestly higher than the flu I don't see how we attempt to get to herd immunity because of how fast and broadly it spreads. Just makes other strategies preferable.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR WYDEN

(U) Over the course of nearly 20 years at the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, I have refused to assume the accuracy of intelligence assessments and have endeavored to always ask the hard questions. That is what this report does: painstakingly scrutinizing every piece of intelligence that went into the Intelligence Community Assessment and allowing the Committee to independently verify the findings of that assessment. The findings are not a "hoax." They are not in doubt because, as Donald Trump stated, Vladimir Putin "very strongly" denies them. Russian interference in the 2016 election is a fact and Donald Trump's deference to Putin only serves to further Russian disinformation and undermine efforts to defend the United States against ongoing attacks.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · Apr 21

Wyden then throws it back to impeachment and the Crowdstrike conspiracy theory, writes there "is no supporting evidence of any kind."

(U) This report also provides additional evidence against Donald Trump's false assertions regarding Ukraine. For example, the Committee conducted an extensive examination of the intelligence demonstrating Russia's intrusions into DNC networks. That review, which confirmed the ICA's findings, is fundamentally incompatible with Trump's conspiracy theories about Ukrainian involvement, for which there is no supporting evidence of any kind.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia Follow

The lack of "wide mandated paper ballots, risk-limiting audits and minimum cyber security standards for all election systems" is a threat to democracy and undermine's our IC's ability to do its job, Wyden writes.

Senator @RonWyden adds a strong addendum to the report.

"The findings are not a 'hoax,'" he writes:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF SENATOR WYDEN

(U) Over the course of nearly 20 years at the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, I have refused to assume the accuracy of intelligence assessments and have endeavored to always ask the hard questions. That is what this report does, painstakingly scrutinizing every piece of intelligence that went into the Intelligence Community Assessment and allowing the Committee to independently verify the findings of that assessment. The findings are not a "hoax." They are not in doubt because, as Donald Trump stated, Vladimir Putin "very strongly" denies them. Russian interference in the 2016 election is a fact and Donald Trump's deference to Putin only serves to further Russian disinformation and undermine efforts to defend the United States against ongoing attacks.

Wyden then throws it back to impeachment and the Crowdstrike conspiracy theory, writes there "is no supporting evidence of any kind."

(U) This report also provides additional evidence against Donald Trump's false assertions regarding Ukraine. For example, the Committee conducted an extensive examination of the intelligence demonstrating Russia's intrusions into DNC networks. That review, which confirmed the ICA's findings, is fundamentally incompatible with Trump's conspiracy theories about Ukrainian involvement, for which there is no supporting evidence of any kind.

There is no morally defensible way to collaborate. Over time, the "minor" moral concessions you have to make to stay in the ruler's good graces add up and you become just another cog in the machine.

Y'all, I think I need a new computer. My faithful Macbook Air has served me well for almost 6 years, traveled lots, and helped me write my book (!) but it's getting slow, battery life is dwindling, and randomly shuts down. Anything I need to know before upgrading?

I think you'll love the brand new MacBook Air. There ARE nice small adapters (...), but I encourage you to TRY getting to know the trackpad. It's the same multi-touch glass technology as iPhone/iPad, and responds to many of the same gestures.

230 does provide the legal framework that makes FB more likely to moderate, removing the threat of the moderation triggering liability for all user content (see Stratton Oakmont)

Jeff Kosseff @jkosseff Apr 20
If the goal is to prevent this type of moderation, full repeal of 230 might accomplish that goal. Platforms might be more cautious about doing any substantive moderation

Weirdly, German has two synonymous words for this type of barrier, Schlagbaum and Schranke. Grew up using Schranke, moved to Russia, now back in Germany and having the hardest time trying to call it anything but Schlagbaum. Some odd kind of re-borrowing going on here

Inbox: ... announcement on planned multi-city flyovers "to recognize healthcare workers, first responders, and other essential personnel while standing in solidarity with all Americans during the COVID-19 pandemic"

America Strong: Blue Angels, Thunderbirds to Conduct Multi-City Flyovers
Championing National Unity behind Frontline Responders

Joint Announcement from the U.S. Navy and U.S. Air Force

In a show of national solidarity, the Navy Flight Demonstration Squadron, the Blue Angels, and the Air Force Air Demonstration Squadron, the Thunderbirds, will conduct a series of multi-city flyovers over the next two weeks.

America Strong is a collaborative salute from the Navy and Air Force to recognize healthcare workers, first responders, and other essential personnel while standing in solidarity with all Americans during the COVID-19 pandemic.

"We're excited to fly over cities across America as our way of saying thanks to the healthcare workers, first responders, and all the people who selflessly run into the breach working to keep America strong," said Gen. Dave Goldfein, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, and Adm. Michael Gilday, Chief of Naval Operations. "This is also our way of showing that we are all in this together and that America's spirit will prevail."

The two demonstration teams will fly over areas of the country hardest hit by COVID-19, starting next week as both joint and individual team flights occurring every one-to-two days until mid-May.

The Air Force and Navy have partnered with local governments and media outlets to help ensure spectators follow Centers for Disease Control and Prevention social distancing guidelines. Both teams are also implementing various measures to maintain personnel and community safety. This includes air-to-air refueling during transit and no scheduled stops en route to reduce potential exposure to the virus.

The Blue Angels, based at Naval Air Station Pensacola, Florida, and Thunderbirds, based at Nellis Air Force Base, Las Vegas, typically fly at more than 30 air shows each year to demonstrate American military aviation. This year, both teams have been forced to cancel many performances in response to Department of Defense direction resulting from the COVID-19 outbreak.

While America Strong will showcase Department of Defense support to healthcare workers, first responders, military, essential employees, and aims to unite all Americans in the fight against COVID-19, it also fulfills critical training requirements for both teams. Pilots must execute a minimum number of flight hours to maintain proficiency. These flyovers will incur no additional cost to taxpayers.

In order to reach the maximum number of Americans, some portions of America Strong will feature only the Blue Angels or the Thunderbirds, while others will include both teams flying in their signature Delta formations simultaneously.

More information to be provided soon on dates and locations.

America Strong schedule: Both teams will work with local media to provide exact times and locations.

For me the best thing about theater- and something I'm missing right now- is the people who come together to make a show. This one was all about that. Sadly the run ended early due to a water main break at the theater, but I'm still so grateful for the community we created.

Take, for instance, a video purporting to be a "hot mic" incident at a recent White House press briefing, in which two reporters are heard to be discussing the alleged low virality of COVID 19 and the fact that "everyone here was vaccinated." You never see the speakers on screen.

Temps haven't been above normal or risen above 70 in DC in two weeks. It's rained the last 5 days. We've had the most days with rain since March 1 on record. And this pattern isn't going away for at least a couple weeks, maybe longer.

Well, this is the entire challenge in reporting on this topic too. In my story on this the very first sentence said IT'S NOT A BIOWEAPON but people still told me that was what they read. So do I just abstain because people might misread?

aweisburd @webradius Apr 30

IMO, you shouldn't abstain because people can/do/will misread, often with malign purpose.

The problem in this case was that the WH signaled clearly they were going to launch a campaign to shift blame, and then proceeded to do so. It's reflexive control and you're the target.

This is referring to the percentage of blank mail-in ballots sent out by election officials and never returned by the voter. It's roughly the same as registered voter turnout overall.

To be clear the reopen movement isn't ONLY anti-vaxx, as I've reported extensively. It's a rat king of anti-vaxx, militia, tea-party types, infowars army, white power extremists and sure, a few folks who want to go back to work. But anti-vaxxers are an oversized piece

The embarrassing thing is that there's no recipe: approx. as much tvorog as you can make from 1/2gallon of whole milk, 2 eggs, ~3/4 c flour, 1.5-2 tsp baking powder, lemon peel, vanilla. Shape by hand or spoons, fry in well-heated oil making sure to turn.

Agree that context is really important — one way we try to address that is by sharing our findings with external researchers. @DFRLab put out a report on this that may address some of your questions.

Looking at the first members of Facebook's Oversight Board, and it is clear they've made an effort to put together a diverse, global group of people. BUT... it would have been nice to see people included who've been openly critical/ahead of their time in foreseeing FB's problems

10:55 AM · 6 May 2020

Sheera Frenkel @sheeraf · May 6

A big problem at FB is that people within the company who have voiced criticism in the past, or clashed with Zuckerberg, have been forced out/left (Read @sarahfrier's new book for a taste of this!) Wouldn't it have been interesting to see them come back as part of this board?

2 2 16

Sheera Frenkel @sheeraf · May 6

I'm thinking of high-profile FB departures, but also outside voices like @zeynep and @davidakaye. These are people who have spent years holding FB to account. Seeing their names on a board would go a long way towards gaining public trust in the board

Sheera Frenkel @sheeraf · May 6

Either way, take a look at the board members for yourself: oversightboard.com/meet-the-board. Like I said, a global and diverse group (great!) but also unclear how much power they have within FB to hold the company to account Reaction time is not going to be very quick, and even if it were, most of the most problematic features of the platform aren't in the board's jurisdiction.

We are left with the current status quo, which is, frankly, inadequate.

And then we get to the board itself. I am a bit dismayed that among the first 20 members, we don't see more representation from Eastern Europe/Russia, still a hotspot for the information operations that put Facebook in the hot seat. This complaint can be extends beyond EE/RU.

I'm sure these folks are brilliant. But I wouldn't trust myself to make consequential decisions about content from places I'd never been to, in languages I didn't speak, related to political contexts I simply read about in a briefing book. Nope. No way.

Just ask yourself, "What about this board's authority could save lives in Myanmar?"

That's what matters. FB could have listened to outside experts for years and perhaps saved lives. It did not. Instead, this.

In just over 2 months, my book will be published!

Amid the COVID-19 infodemic and ahead of the 2020 election, the stories it tells from the front lines of the information war are even more relevant. We ignore them at our own peril.

Preorder now:

The oversight board is a smoke screen. It distracts from the fundamental problem that Facebook decides globally(!) based on a questionable business model what users see in their feed. This is a distraction from dealing with the root cause.

The reason FB gave for removing the video is that the video contains the suggestion that wearing a mask can make you sick or lead to imminent harm

2 12 55

Sheera Frenkel @sheeraf May 7

I will note: multiple independent fact checkers have found the video to contain rampant conspiracy theories. (See: snopes.com/50-hottest-urb...) It has still managed to go viral. Last night on YouTube, just one version of the video had 5 million views.

We're seeing new versions of the full video which are harder for our systems to detect (eg recorded on phone) which we're looking for and removing. Also seeing clips without the mask claim, which are eligible for fact-checking and being demoted in meantime as we're aware of them do the video's other portions with claims about vaccines killing people not violate broader FB policy on anti-vaccine health misinfo? (ie is this not also the first "type" of misinfo per FB's categories, capable of causing real world harm?)

How is your book going to help both Facebook and twitter not to hand a second term to 45 exactly?
Without those 2 involved I dont see how reading your book is going to help

My book lays out the solutions that government, social media companies, and society need to pursue to protect democracy. I didn't write it to change election outcomes, I wrote it to inform people. It will do that regardless of election outcomes.

Thank u 4 the response
The first 2 are not going to do anything unless we flip senate, kick moron out so government can make social media companies do a better job cleaning content

With 33M unemployed, society is busy with other things

Good luck with the book

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · May 10

You should read the book. The problem is much wider than "making" platforms do better at "cleaning content."

Have a nice day.

What's so striking about this, when you pull back, is how much effort the Trump axis is putting towards an attempted relitigating of the Russia scandal – now, in the middle of a crippling pandemic and six months from Election Day.

Large percentages of Americans are only being reminded of a "coup" waged against their preferred candidate. Even more Americans are being overwhelmed by two completely incompatible realities with their own facts and authorities.

Putin's media tactics right here in America.

This is the most depressing thing I've seen in weeks: President Trump's aggressive language about press as "fake news" and the "enemy of the people" directed at a local news journalist who filed an unflinchingly fair story after being berated.

When I lived in Ukraine, almost every day I'd walk by this makeshift memorial for Pavel Sheremet, an investigative journalist who had long been a target of the powerful people he wrote about. He was killed by a car bomb just before I moved to Kyiv. His murder is unresolved.

But what of the psychological research dating from the 70s to present day that suggests that people are more likely to recall false information even after they've been corrected? I feel like this isn't quite as simple as "full stop" might suggest

My problem is too much of the "debate" s rooted in models that aren t very reflective of the current reality or aims. A lot of the disagreement centers around "a lie s broadcast, and a correction is broadcast which reactivates the lie" Which, sometimes, yeah

Mike Caulfield @holden · 13h

But what I m much more interested in is I see a lie and then I see a reply from someone who says, yeah, this is not true, here s a link as to why. And if I see that I m less likely to share it, believe it, etc. And I think there s quite a bit of research show that that works

I share this photo because we take a lot for granted in this country. Walking by a memorial to a murdered journalist every day changes that. And it's chilling to hear the words "enemy of the people" levied by my fellow citizens at a journalist simply carrying out his work.

"Fake news is not essential," they yelled- but if journalism were not essential, if uncovering the stories of the rich and powerful were not so critical to the functioning of our democracies, then this job wouldn't be so dangerous for so many.

Here's another heartbreaking story about a journalist murdered along with this fiancée for his work.

There are too many of these cases. Too many. (1370 deaths since 1992, according to ...) And now journalists face increased verbal and physical aggression here, in the land of the free, based on words they hear from the White House podium.

A new (likely authentic) trolling campaign on the White House Instagram page, spearheaded by Russians pissed off that the Trump administration neglected to mention the USSR's role in ending WWII.

Ben Nimmo @benimmo

As @wiczipedia rightly deduced, it starts with this post on May 8. The White House commemorates the victory of "America and Great Britain over the Nazis"

Shouldn't trolling imply inauthenticity of speech, if not necessarily behaviour?

You say something not because you feel that way, but because you want to provoke a specific reaction.

I am sure lots of Russians were genuinely angry with that post

First of all, I didn't agree with that White House post either

But, trolling is "to antagonize (others) online by deliberately posting inflammatory, irrelevant, or offensive comments or other disruptive content" - spamming a page en masse is certainly antagonizing

That strategy goes back decades, I believe. More recently, they've employed it as a way to attract viewers. RTs uses a "question more" branding that aims to get people to question western "mainstream" media and turn to an "alternative" outlet (run by the Russian government)

How ... casually says that Joe Biden "as a high ranking US official often spoke on behalf of the international community"

No mandat, no reason given. As if being the former autmatically makes you being the later. Also, what is this "international community"?

Jörg Wolf @transatlantic · 1h

Sure, short video and purpose is to criticize something else.

Just a general observation of what seems to be a common "blob" practice, that maybe should be reflected upon. Plus the maybe funny, maybe somewhat codescending comment about netflix and washing hands at the end

Ha. We have two built-ins in the house and when quarantine started it made sense to do videos in front of this one. it also has excellent lighting thanks to four windows on two sides in that room! Just common sense, no focus group 🙃

Breaking: Michigan sends absentee ballots to 7.7 million people ahead of Primaries and the General Election. This was done illegally and without authorization by a rogue Secretary of State. I will ask to hold up funding to Michigan if they want to go down this Voter Fraud path!..

It is truly amazing to me how 99.9% of the snide, rude, aggressive replies to me on this site are from men (usually men who completely lack experience in or knowledge of what I'm talking about).

God forbid I am curt in my response: then I become "typical" or "a cliche."

There is definitely something to the whole "men needing to correct women." I've had plenty of snide/rude comments from women, just more like maybe 20%. I think society in general is just rude and callous, although men are definitely most commonly the culprit.

I have received questions today from foreign journalists on Derkach tapes and @ZelenskyyUa comments regarding criminal investigation of these tapes. I don't think Zelenskyi wants to please Trump or harm Biden with this investigation. It seems Ze was actual target of the tapes

Excellent question and one I've been thinking about a lot as I struggle to find ways to tackle the current avalanche of nonsense. I'd love to research this type of intervention. How is it received? How does it compare to other types?

When Nina does it, it always goes viral. Experts speaking succinctly might be real defense against disinfo, especially when they're clear and direct and, like normal, which Nina fortunately is.

What's hard about it is that quick responses from academics, just like fast journalism, can sink you. One bad hot take, in the right environment, could lead to losing all the credibility you've built up over time.

Bottom line, I REALLY appreciate journalists editing me!

I, too, live in fear of screwing up, but when videos like this have been successful (and when I have the guts to do them) it's been me distilling issues that are complex to accessible summaries- I wouldn't describe them as "takes." The key is that they're simple & fact-based.

Having worked with both journos and academics, it is extremely rare to find someone who has the expertise to understand these issues in their full complexity and the skill to share it in a clear and pithy way. So maybe helping experts build those comms skills is a place to start?

Didn't forget :) Have covered this in many other interviews and commentary (see thread below tweet), but since Burisma is not mentioned in these recordings at all - because that's not what Shokin's firing was about - didn't think it was worth even mentioning!

But Trump continues to say – without evidence – it will lead to voter fraud and that it's not "honest voting."

That's. Simply. Not. True.

More people need to report the shady stuff they see on social media. Facebook's ad director on why ⤵️

Rob Leathern @robleathern
Reporting or hiding Facebook/Instagram ads (top right of ad) you don't like is useful. It generates signals that may help the system reduce the display of these ads. Due to ongoing workforce impacts, we are relying more heavily on automation to detect and remove ads (1/3)

Because she writes and sells books and is exploiting the attention, because antivaxxers believe this stuff and think 'herd immunity' is the cure, and millions more than the usual norm believe this because it has become politically motivated in a very bizarre way

Gulliver Cragg @gullivercragg · 37m

So she's motivated by money & nihilistic cynicism. I can see a vicious circle developing here as more & more people cease to see defending truth as worthwhile. But the anti-vaxxers? who is making money or achieving political gain off them? Are they just true misguided believers?

One interview I unfortunately could not squeeze in was with @StewartMcDonald on the functioning of the UK parliament during COVID. He observed that there's far less grandstanding during "digital" convenings of parliament.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 11m

Debate has become more productive because there's less grandstanding, Stewart McDonald said. MPs "look even more naff when they don't have 300 of their colleagues cheering them on, asking govt ministers don't they agree how wonderful they are, or indeed just shouting at them."

That sort of debate, @StewartMcDonald said, "looks kind of small and not really rising to the occasion that we find ourselves us."

This is something I hope to explore more- can this "digital renaissance" bring back the humanity to our online discourse?

In case you are still doubting how Facebook Groups suggestions work, a quick case study:

1. Search for "alternative health." Choose a group with over 70k members.

2. Here are the suggestions for that group:
- a white supremacist/conspiracy theory group called "Sheep No More" (hello pepe the frog), ~9k members
- a Qanon group, ~37k members

Yesterday, Mark Zuckerberg claimed in a Fox News interview that Facebook is "hands-off" when it comes to political speech.

It isn't.

Here's a researcher who joined an anti-quarantine Facebook group. The next day she was recommended a QAnon group.

This is hands-on.

Erin Gallagher @3r1nG

Welp Facebook now is suggesting I join a Qanon group with 32K members. This is the first time I've ever been recommended Qanon on Facebook, so I assume it's related to me joining the Pennsylvanians Against...

address polarization. Chief Executive Mark Zuckerberg had in public and private expressed concern about "sensationalism and polarization." But in the end, Facebook's interest was fleeting. Mr. Zuckerberg and other senior executives largely shelved the basic research, according to previously unreported internal documents and people familiar with the effort, and weakened or blocked efforts to apply its conclusions to Facebook products. Facebook policy chief Joel Kaplan, who played a central role in vetting proposed changes, argued at the time that efforts to make conversations on the platform more civil were "paternalistic," said people familiar with his comments.

By the way, regarding my friend who had 5 ballots sent to his house. I'm embarrassed to say he's a Trump supporter. The good news, he's a California resident, so it doesn't matter how many times he votes for Trump. However, the same may not be true for down ballot elections.

Robert Homans @rhomans · 8h

Replying to @wiczipedia ... TheAtlantic

How can you dispute the fact that my friend got 5 ballots sent to his house, but only 1 addressed to him? You multiply that times a few thousand houses and you have the potential for large scale election fraud. For this reason, among others, vote harvesting should be banned.

I'll have a lot more to say about this in the morning, but I'm going to bed knowing that our election is much less safe tonight.

With these threats against platforms enforcing their terms, how can we be confident the appropriate action will be taken to mitigate interference?

have you thought about creating a template format?

so, maybe after its designated number, for every example include the concisest possible description, clearly separated out from the body that might increase the speed + accuracy people can scan through them and their efficacy

People wonder why “it’s a big deal” when reporters and photographers are arrested or shot at or pepper sprayed. A key part of rigorous journalism is reporting: the practice and process of finding out what happened and when, to who, and where. And to then contextalize the why.

Sulaiman Drammeh, 19, came to the protest across the street from the White House amid a pandemic because he said people need to physically show up to send a message that black people need to be treated equally. He is not a professional organizer. He is a concerned citizen.

sadly there's never not a fitting moment to return to an earlier comparison of Putin-era and Trumpian cultures of wily compromise with power, and how in America, so many have bent so quickly and so cheaply nytimes.com/2020/03/09/opi ...

In Russia, the consequence of refusing to compromise is often clear: the frustration of worthy ambitions left unrealized, a career that goes nowhere, or maybe, if the stakes are high or you're supremely unlucky, undue attention from police and the courts. But in America, at least at the moment, a wider spectrum of choices remains. And that is the scary thing about observing wiliness at home: how readily and quickly we bend, not when there is truly no other choice, but when there are plenty of other choices, the wily one being merely the easiest and most expedient.

This actually shows a lot about how Zuck thinks & explains some of Facebook's (non) responses. There's only a binary: take down or leave up. No shades of grey to equip users with more info. I still think that in the parameters of protecting free speech, Twitter's response was Except Churchill didn't need to clear Londoners from the streets with tear gas to do it, and in fact, often eschewed the advice of his security guards to interact w/ them.

(Also, standing in front of a church w/ a Bible =/= "assessing damage" & peaceful protestors are not Nazis)

I know it's apocryphal but the scene from "The Darkest Hour" when Churchill rode the Tube was perfect because it was believable.

Nobody thinks Trump could display any physical bravery.

No, we mostly think, is that the human right and free speech that US has turned in to a huge baseball bat and hits us in the head with day in and day out? Is this what we have lived under most sever sanctions for for years? We are getting crushed to finally become this?

Must read- the brilliant, brave @KillerMartinis newrepublic.com/article/158001 ...

I rage instead on behalf of my country, for the hundreds of millions of people who were appalled when Trump administration officials tried to change the words of Emma Lazarus into a brief for white resentment. I rage for the irony of the line "yearning to breathe free," because we would not have our cities ablaze had our leadership cared an instant for the freedom or breath of those it considers its opposition, which is to say the citizenry.

If we must talk about press freedom, we must also talk about the First Amendment's absolute guarantee of freedom of peaceable assembly—and the fact that it is the police, not some mythic rogue formation of Antifa saboteurs, who are escalating conflicts. We know this because journalists keep documenting it, and because any person in a demonstration can become a momentary journalist if they have a cell phone and a data

All that being said, as @ChristopherJM and I were just chatting about privately, this new policy does have the potential to go wrong. I'm encouraged that FB will be looking at editorial control, so that outlets like BBC, PBS, RFE aren't labeled the same way as Sputnik, RT, CCTV.

Twitter outright banned state media ads a while back, in response to misleading boosted posts around HK.

Although the policy is a work in progress, think labeling & providing an increase in transparency around the funding & affiliation of various channels is a step forward

This is an important thread- I think a lot of people buy into misinformation about alleged media bias because they just don't understand how journalism gets done.

It's up to reporters and producers to pull back the curtain more often and increase their awareness.

Agree!! When my pup went on NPR last year producer @lilkat_bigworld did the most incredible job following him around with a special mic to capture all his sniffs, pants, and mouth noises. 😍

New eggs! Mama (who I've taken to calling "Mrs Lazee" for occupying this old nest and papering it over with new twigs and grass) was absent for a bit this morning so I was able to snap this photo. Will she lay a third? Only time will tell...

Today marks three months until my book is out in the wild, and amid the coronavirus pandemic, this particular passage seems more important than ever.

Preorders help first time authors a lot, so hope you'll get your copy today. Links to purchasing options in the thread below:

Pre-ordered today, through my local indiebound store, which has curbside pickup (for now).

(I have nothing to do with Indiebound, just want to promote local booksellers.)

This is a hugely irresponsible move on behalf of the WH.

Add to the poor messaging and optics of not wearing masks and holding in-person briefings at all, which many of our allies stopped doing months ago.

The right to peacefully protest is enshrined in the constitution, and this was a sanctioned, permitted protest for which the city closed the streets. Thanks for playing though.

My reading is rather different. He's also exploiting his followers' inability to read German in ways that lead many (in responses) to align antifascism with fascism by zooming on just one word they easily recognize in the foreground. It's a multi-purpose propaganda tweet.

Interesting! I mostly thought he wanted them to see the antifa logo and associate it with communism and be "shocked" at the discovery

Agree, as a troll tweet it's pretty versatile

I did too before I read the comments. Unsure if ambiguity was deliberate or not but it seems to be a strength of propaganda these days.

Do you often forget to eat?

I ate "lunch" at ~5pm twice last week so this morning I put two pastries, a slice of toast, a yogurt, and a banana on my desk. Remember to take breaks and have lunch.

Let's get this out of the way once and for all. Here's an alt view of #buffalopolice incident. This video is from street side and tracks the subject thru all frames. You can clearly see (and hear) the man's head hit the concrete with enough force that it bounces several inches.

Here is a different angle of the incident in Buffalo in which an officer/s pushed over a 75yo man, leading him to tumble to the concrete sidewalk where he hit his head and fell unconscious.

In @WBFO footage, subject falls backwards out of the frame and camera (but not microphone) misses the moment of impact. This immediately led to rumors that the fall was faked. This footage [illegible] captured from the other side [illegible] eliminates that possibility Ukraine's Foreign Minister lauds U.S. support of Ukraine's defense and sovereignty (a commendable and critical project regardless of political inclination).

Every time I try to message someone in America on WhatsApp or Signal, I am dumbfounded to find they are not on either platform.

Do Americans just send SMSs to each other?

Was just discussing how while I wish Americans cared about data privacy and security more, at least this means we don't have the rampant disinformation-on-encrypted-messenger-problem.... yet.

I left WhatsApp bc my Indian relatives would send me crap all day long. I have Facebook for that. Don't need it for texting lol

Tbh, this was why it was so difficult for me to wrap my mind around disinformation spreading through these apps. My default is still just a regular SMS :/

Been thinking all day about how easy it was to find these posts off provided screenshots and how difficult FB made it seem. Like, it took 15 mins tops.

And this is such a clear public health issue. And they only removed what we flagged. Ugh.

I lurk on this MAGA listserv- it's a good summary of what is going on in MAGAland.

Today I found out that its curator fled communism... This is surprising because she once called people owning beachfront property and prohibiting public beach access "communism."

of watching Americans apologize for their history, it's founders and heroes, whether they were on the right side of America's history or not. Tired of the thought police, speech police and memorial police imposing 21st century standards on public and private figures from two and three centuries ago. Tired of collective groveling that will buy no goodwill. Tired of agitators who will not stop at reimagining America until there is no America left.

I wasn't born in this country. I was brought here by my parents who escaped this very sort of systematic destruction of their country's history by Communists who knew that robbing future generations of any connection to their past was easier to mold and control. Just like whatever the Left touches ruins, so will the WOKE culture do. This, like every other subversive thought, began in American Americans, a house divided cannot stand and you are allowing the forces of subversion to divide your country from within. Too many people with grievances, real or imagined, are using a scorched earth policy to achieve their version of reconciliation. Problem with this is that it destroys everything. If you don't stop this now, your country will be erased from history and what rises from its ashes will very well be a Dragon of darkness and not a Phoenix of light.

Another strange juxtaposition is that she pleads for people to listen to one another- when a counter protestor showed up at one of her anti lockdown events, she berated him at close distance and coughed in his face. Unity! Reconciliation! America!

More seriously, I have encountered this jingoistic attitude among many 1st/2nd generation Americans from CEE, and it kills me. They see more parallels btwn communism & protestors than btwn communism & those putting down protestors. Impressive willful ignorance of recent history.

For those that don't know, my grandfather was WWII refugee who settled in the US after being deported from Poland by the Soviets at age 10, spending years in labor camps, traveling from Arkhangelsk to Central Asia to Persia to the UK, and finally to the US.

More seriously, I have encountered this jingoistic attitude among many 1st/2nd generation Americans from CEE, and it kills me. They see more parallels btwn communism & protestors than btwn communism & those putting down protestors. Impressive willful ignorance of recent history

For those that don't know, my grandfather was WWII refugee who settled in the US after being deported from Poland by the Soviets at age 10, spending years in labor camps, traveling from Arkhangelsk to Central Asia to Persia to the UK, and finally to the US.

He built a successful business and lived a pretty storybook version of the American dream. It's a little cliche, but remember him telling me, while I sat on his knee, that I could be President if I wanted to. He really believed in this country and our democratic project.

He would be 91 this year if he were alive, so maybe he wouldn't agree with everything happening in politics right now. But he sure as shit would respect people's right to peaceably protest in service of a more perfect union.

All this to say: democracy is not a destination. You have never "arrived." And anyone that tells you the opposite (Keep America Great?) is likely trying to sell you some form of authoritarianism so they can preserve the power structures that continue to benefit them.

Yes, there's no "End of History" - though for now the problem isn't progress on the "improve humanity" vs "resist change" spectrum. Rather we have a practical problem on information overload & social media.

This tweet is about the argument people make. The argument is not completely off-base. And it's very well developed in the WSJ piece

Sorry, we are talking about two entirely different things. I am talking about this woman's behavior and condemnation of anything that sits left of her as "communism."

I don't see where she opposes peaceful protest in the content you posted. Or where she endorses authoritarianism. I do seem to recall the communists doing quite a bit of rewriting of history though so that parallel seems to be quite valid.

Her opinion is that woke people are ingrates. And that their demands are culturally destructive. That isn't a rejection of the right to protest.

Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia · 14m

It's a rejection of these [read: Black] people's right to protest. I've read her newsletter and followed her long enough to know this.

Bubba Raskin @bubbaraskin · 7m

The rant you posted is 100% against wokeness with no racial component. I can quite easily see the parallels between wokeness and communism as experienced by people in EE. Nor is there an actual rejection of the right of protest in the text. Have a nice day.

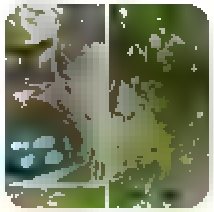
Sad to report a crow got to the nest this morning while Mama bird was away 😢

I've been seeing a few young robins who are likely from the last clutch in the nest, though. Life goes on, but I'll miss my little bird family.



Nina Jankowicz @wiczipedia
Big ruckus just now in BirdLand: a group of mockingbirds was loudly attacking a large crow near the nest. I ran out (the nest tree is near my office window) and shooed the crow away, fearing the worst for our Robin family, but... 4 eggs! And mama safely

The lady doth protest too much Last night, Twitter suspended over 7K fake accounts in Turkey. Turkey s spox, no fan of free speech, s outraged. Hmmm wonder if any of those fake troll accounts were run by the government. cc

For those that don't think calling people who disagree with you (and, subtext, are a different skin color than you) "ingrates" is bad, I looked at the same influencer's rhetoric around COVID in a recent newsletter which I just unlocked for non-subscribers
